

We present results from numerical simulations of dynamos in rapidly rotating Rayleigh-Benard convection.

At Rayleigh numbers that are few times supercritical, the self-sustained magnetic field is large scale, and mainly horizontal. At larger Rayleigh numbers, the dynamo becomes small scale despite the rotationally constrained nature of the flow.

We discuss the transition between these two dynamo regimes.